Written by Christine Ganger Active in softball, cheerleading and other sports, Kristine trusted her young, lean body to carry her through exciting and wonderful adventures. But when her body turned on her, it would force her to make a critical decision: give up or else. Christine chose "or else," and shares her story of a journey into Multiple Sclerosis and her daily decision to survive. Giving up was always a temptation, because living with MS is a battle that never ends; and a body just gets tired. Christine shares some very raw and personal moments throughout this book and how she manages to work through them, all the while keeping her focus on God's plan for her life and the hope and peace that can be found in Him. Walk of Hope reveals the mind and heart of a Multiple Sclerosis survivor, and how hope can make the mind and heart overcome the physical body for anyone experiencing similar physical disabilities. Written by Vincent Spoto After his diagnosis in 2006 and in the beginning stages of the disease, Vincent often wondered "why me?" and did not think it was fair that he was amongst the chosen individuals destined to endure the journey called MS. However, after living with MS for many years and speaking with others who courageously battle all types of life challenges, Vincent's outlook began to change. In his book, Vincent recounts the many daily life adjustments he has made to better cope with MS, all while maintaining a positive attitude and keeping an optimistic outlook for the future, He hopes his personal journey of living with MS will provide positive inspiration to others the way others have inspired him.
